The Chiltern Brewery at Terrick (signposted from the A413 Wendover bypass) is one of England's great little breweries. They have been family-owned and run since their launch in 1980.

They now have probably the most diverse range of beers, both draught and bottled, brewery chandlery, and associated services of any brewery in the United Kingdom. Indeed we are delighted that our chandlery range has been enthusiastically described as "the best all-rounder" in the U.K. by Mrs Susan Nowak, of the prestigious British Guild of Beer Writers, in her book the Beer Cook Book.

In days of generally declining product quality - and accompanying blandness of presentation - they have moved specifically in the opposite direction, by deliberately using only raw materials of the highest quality available and preferably of English or British extraction. As a result of their insistence on supreme quality, they have been privileged to have a number of beers mashed-in and launched by prominent local people including the Earl of Buckinghamshire, the 10th direct descendant of John Hampden; Mr Colin Dexter, author of Inspector Morse; and Sir Nigel Mobbs KStJ JP, Lord-Lieutenant for Buckinghamshire.

Their regional relevance with speciality bottled beers has made them the first Buckinghamshire brewery to be appointed a supplier to two national supermarkets and a number of select hotels, delicatessens and restaurants in the area. Additionally, the great houses of the Thames and Chilterns region of The National Trust have incorporated their beer and cheeses in their restaurants. Local customers of course have the added delight of visiting the uniquely presented Brewery Shop and visitors on conducted tours usually enjoy one of their famous "Brewery Bills of Fare" to conclude their trip.

The Buckinghamshire Breweries Museum - the first small brewery museum in the U.K. - is an added attraction on site.
